Happy Father's Day

So, what does the perfect father look like?

If you search the internet and ask what different cultures consider important attributes of fatherhood, you will find remarkable agreement. Most cultures value the same fundamental qualities: protection—keeping children physically and emotionally safe; teaching—passing on values, skills, and traditions; responsibility—demonstrating reliability and commitment to family duties; role modeling—showing integrity, self-control, and good character; and love and care—expressing affection and concern for one's children.

Our Catholic faith teaches that the role of fatherhood is so important that God entrusted His Son to the care of a foster father, Saint Joseph. Through his humility, servant leadership, self-sacrificing love, and obedience to God's will, Joseph protected both Jesus and Mary from Herod's wrath.

Joseph was given perhaps the most important role entrusted to any man other than Jesus Himself: to protect, nurture, and teach. Sacred Scripture records relatively few words from the Blessed Virgin Mary and not a single spoken word from Saint Joseph. Yet through their actions, Mary became known as the Mother of God, and Joseph came to be honored as the "Terror of Demons."

Joseph was not merely a provider or protector. He was a teacher, a guide, and a humble example for all of us to follow.

Regardless of how society views the importance of fatherhood—and make no mistake, fatherhood is increasingly challenged by cultural forces that seek to redefine or diminish its role—the Church teaches that the father is the head of the domestic church, the foundation upon which the universal Church is built. A father's responsibility is to lead by example and to teach Catholic values through the faithful practice of those values in daily life.

The challenges facing families today are real. Our faith continues to proclaim timeless truths. God created man and woman (Genesis 1:27), and within His design we continue to find wisdom, strength, and purpose. We also see the consequences when families are fractured and fathers are absent. Children thrive best when both a father and a mother are present, loving, and committed to their responsibilities. Without either, the family stands on a weakened foundation.

So, what does the perfect father look like?

The Father who is there.

Imperfect, with faults and shortcomings like every other man, yet striving each day to lead, teach, protect, and love as best he can. Like Saint Joseph, he faithfully accepts the responsibilities entrusted to him and places the needs of his family before his own.

That father is worthy of honor.

Happy Father's Day,
Deacon John
